

Counseling

Resource Navigation

Support Groups

Education

Financial Assistance

DONATE

CANCERcare®

Over 80 Years of Help and Hope

HOME

OUR SERVICES

PUBLICATIONS

Dating and New Relationships: During and After Cancer

FACT SHEET

A cancer diagnosis can often impact how you view dating and romantic relationships. Often, it can be difficult to adjust to the emotional and physical challenges that accompany a diagnosis. This fact sheet will cover:

This website utilizes technologies such as cookies to enable essential site functionality, as well as for analytics, personalization, and targeted advertising. Privacy Policy

- The way you feel about yourself Accept
- When and how to start dating again
- Discussing cancer with your partner Deny Non-Essential
- Physical intimacy

Your Comfort and Self-Esteem

---

Be comfortable with yourself. Cancer and its treatment can have a major impact on you mentally and physically. You may feel different since the last time you dated and nervous about meeting new people. Make sure you feel good about yourself and where you are first.

Stay positive. Dating is not always easy, even before a cancer diagnosis. Rejection and not finding the right match can be common. Try not to raise your expectations too much and try to enjoy the experience of simply meeting people.

Get support. While friends and family can help, a support group can provide guidance, perspective and a unique judgment-free environment. CancerCare's licensed oncology social workers can help with your emotional well-being, free of charge. Call 800 813-HOPE (4673).

A Return to Dating

---

Decide when it's the right time for you. Managing everything from doctor appointments or treatment side effects can be difficult and stressful. Don't push yourself into new relationships until you feel that you are ready.

Start slow, start small. It's normal to feel nervous or anxious about dating. Consider getting involved in group social events, taking a local class or joining a club. Starting small with these types of activities can help build confidence, self-esteem and social skills.

Your health is a top priority. Do not pressure yourself to do too much or be too active. If your mental state or physical comfort change, you should focus on getting better. Your health is most important.

Talking About Your Diagnosis

---

Plan when to talk about your cancer. Before long, you may want to tell your partner about your cancer and treatment. Wait until you are ready. Consider preparing answers to questions they may have about side effects, the possibility of the cancer returning and more.

Be honest. Being clear about your feelings and about your cancer diagnosis can encourage the person you are dating to be honest about their feelings as well. Communication, honesty and trust will become increasingly significant as your relationship grows.

Physical Intimacy

This website utilizes technologies such as cookies to enable essential site functionality, as well as for analytics, personalization, and targeted advertising. Privacy Policy

Talking about intimacy or the physical closeness in a new relationship is important. You may feel self-conscious about changes to your body due to cancer treatment. Talking about your feelings may help your relationship and improve emotional trust. These conversations can be difficult, so you may want to prepare. Decide what you want to say. You may want to write it down to help guide the conversation. Be open with your partner about your desires, needs and what you feel able to do.

View all of CancerCare's resources to help you better cope with your cancer diagnosis »

---

Last updated Wednesday, May 15, 2024

The information presented in this publication is provided for your general information only. It is not intended as medical advice and should not be relied upon as a substitute for consultations with qualified health professionals who are aware of your specific situation. We encourage you to take information and questions back to your individual health care provider as a way of creating a dialogue and partnership about your cancer and your treatment.

This website utilizes technologies such as cookies to enable essential site functionality, as well as for analytics, personalization, and targeted advertising. Privacy Policy